BIG EXPRESS SHIPMENT COST LOCAL CO. $1032

Steam Turbine Sent Here From Lynn, Mass.

WEIGHED TWENTY TONS

Records for big express shipments were shattered at the local office on Monday when a huge steam turbine, consigned to the Keystone Power Corporation for their plant at Milesburg was received in good shape. The turbine weighed twenty tons and the express charges were $1,032 22.

With the arrival of the steam turbine, a story became known. About a week or so previously one of the turbines in the plant at Milesburg, where the electricity for power and light throughout this section is generated, was seriously damaged when accidentally burned out. It had to be replaced quickly so as not to impair the service.

Local manager E. C. Musser, as usual, was promptly on the job and the damaged turbine was loaded onto a truck and a trip to Philadelphia started. It took just one day and one night of solid driving to reach the factory in the Quaker City. Then it was learned it would be several weeks before the repairs could be completed. Mr. Musser immediately got in touch with H. M. Power, formerly manager here and a short time ago promoted to Pittsburgh. Arrangements were made for the purchase of a turbine in Lynn, Mass., and it was rushed here by express. On its arrival, it was loaded onto a truck and safely taken to Milesburg, where it is being installed and will be ready for service before the end of the week.

The entire expense to the Keystone Power Corporation on account of the accident which impaired the turbine in use and made it advisable to have the new one sent in by express, will amount to several thousands of dollars.

Commenting on the arrangement, Mr. Musser said, "This is in keeping with our policy to give the public service. We are determined to give a real service regardless of cost."

AUTOS IN COLLISION

Mrs. Newton Miller and Miss Regina Rapp Injured.

A serious automobile collision occurred on Sunday evening when a car driven by Edmund C. Miller, of Bellefonte, accompanied by his mother, Mrs. N. A. Miller, and Miss Regina Rapp, of Bellefonte, the latter employed in the State College Electric Supply Co. store, was struck by a car driven by Walter Busko, of Spike Island, Rush township. Both cars were considerably damaged and the two women were cut and bruised, their injuries not being considered as serious, however. The trio from Bellefonte were obliged to return home by train and arrived here on Monday evening.

Miller, who is a student at Penn State, his mother and friend, went to Philipsburg to visit with Mrs. Miller's sister, Mrs. William Lester. They were driving along the state highway between Philipsburg and Osceola Mills, near Midway park, when the other car was driven into the Miller car, it is said. There were four other men in Busko's car, it is alleged, and some were accused of drinking intoxicating beverages so that they were unable to control the car. In fact, it is reported that one man was not able to leave the car and so was easily arrested by Daniel Brink, Philipsburg police officer, who put him in the Philipsburg lockup but later released him. None of the other men were heard from up until the time we went to press. Busko who is alleged to be the owner and driver of the car, was said not to have returned home.

None of the occupants of the cars were injured excepting Mrs. Miller and Miss Rapp. How the others escaped, considering the condition of the cars, is marvelled at. Mrs. Miller seems to be having much trouble recently, having sustained a fracture of the left arm a few weeks ago which has not yet healed.

Reunion of Officers of 28th.

The reunion of officers of the 28th devision will be held at Camp Boal on June 9, 10 and 11. Col. Theodore Davis Boal will be the host. Col. Boal was this week asked regarding the program, but said that so far arrangements are not completed and no invitations have been given except to Gen. Muir who said he could come at the time planned. This has been an annual event attracting the officers of the 28th to the highly appreciated hospitality of Col. Boal and the coming reunion is looked forward to with keen anticipation.

MANDAMUS REFUSED

Expect County Commissioners to Make Amicable Agreement.

The mandamus proceedings brought against the County Commissioners by George Summers, of Boggs Twp., was heard in Argument Court on Tuesday as scheduled. While Judge Henry C. Quigley refused a mandamus, the case was not regarded as altogether unsuccessful. The attempt to place ownership of the bridge on the county, however, was a failure. The evidence which the County Commissioners submitted was apparently conclusive in showing that the structure which spanned Bald Eagle creek at Snow Shoe Intersection was not a county bridge.

An amicable agreement between the County Commissioners and the road supervisors of Boggs Twp. is expected which would make it possible to span Bald Eagle creek with a bridge at the point desired, giving proper access to the Masonic club house and for the families who reside on properties south of the stream in that section.

It has been suggested that the County Commissioners will make sale to the road supervisors at a figure the latter should be able to meet a bridge which spans Spring creek at Rock and which could be comparatively easily moved and placed over Bald Eagle creek. No definite action has been made, however, from what we can learn.

SLEEPING SICKNESS FATAL

George's Valley Youth, Student at State, Is Victim.

Oris Barger, a well known young man of George's valley and who started to the Pennsylvania State College last September, is the first victim in Centre County of "sleeping sickness." He died in the University hospital in Philadelphia last Thursday after being ill for several weeks.

Barger was attending school when he first noticed symptoms of this peculiar malady. He was unable to keep awake and his attending physician sent him to the University hospital in the hope that experts there might be able to bring about a cure.

Deceased was 18 years old and is survived by his mother and grandparents, of Spring Mills postoffice, but residing near Synagogue church in George's valley. The body was brought from Philadelphia on Saturday and burial was made at George's valley cemetery on Tuesday morning.

Have Trip Schedule Ready.

D. W. Lewis, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh was in Bellefonte during the weekend making preliminary arrangements prior to the Pittsburgh business men visiting here. The trip schedule for the 22nd trade tour of the Pittsburgh business men has been announced and shows stops from Pittsburgh to Jamestown, N. Y., to Elmira, thence to Williamsport via Lock Haven to Bellefonte, thence to Huntingdon and on to Cumberland, Md. The train will arrive in Bellefonte on May 10th at 12.30 and will be here for one hour, leaving at 1:30 for Huntingdon. The trip will be started on May 7th and will end on May 11th.

Saw 12 Deer in Field.

Passengers on a Pennsylvania railroad train witnessed an unusual and interesting incident nearby Huntingdon shortly before 7 o'clock Tuesday evening. Twelve deer came out from the mountain and were feeding in a field of grass not more than 200 feet distant from the railroad tracks. Seemingly the deer had become accustomed to the frequent passing of trains. They continued to graze, apparently unconcerned, while several hundred passengers on the train in question remained grouped about the windows. Even the sounding of the locomotive whistle failed to frighten the deer.

Cadets Band Coming.

The State College Cadets band, one of the best in the state, is scheduled to appear in the Garman opera house on Friday evening for the benefit of the Brooks-Doll post of the American Legion. The admission is 50 cents anywhere in the house. This is an opportunity to enjoy an evening's entertainment not often afforded and at the same time aid the Brooks-Doll post in their work.

ABANDONED PLAN FOR BUILDING NEW THEATRE

J. Howard Thompson Has Taken an Option on Opera House

NEW PLANS DIVULGED

All plans for building a new theatre in Bellefonte seem to follow the same route—abondoned for one reason or another before getting far advanced. Apparently the plan to erect a new theatre on the Hiller property, recently purchased by J. Howard Thompson, of Curwensville, has also been abandoned. Mr. Thompson was in town last week, presumably arranging the details of improvements on the dwelling house which is converted into offices and apartments.

An option on the Garman opera house was secured by Mr. Thompson while he was here, too, but this did not become generally known—in fact, was kept quiet until it leaked out the other day. The option it is learned from good authority, is for a period of one year and would enable Mr. Thompson to purchase the property for less than one-half what it would actually cost to put up a similar building.

The narrow entrance to the opera house would be made perhaps 30 feet wide by doing away with offices to the right and left, small lunch rooms operated on either side of the enlarged entrance; remodeling inside to support the balcony by means of steel girders that would make it possible to do away with the posts that are present supports; enlargement of the stage to accommodate bigger shows; increasing of the present seating capacity of 800 by putting an addition from the rear of the building to Cherry alley and placing the stage further south; the whole change to mean an additional expenditure roughly estimated at $30,000—these are some of the suggested improvements that would enable the community to have a more modern theatre as considered by Mr. Thompson in the new plans as divulged.

Mr. Thompson also is quoted as having informed friends, while in town last week, that by next year a big business building, having two stores fronting on High street and extending to Cherry alley, with apartments above, will be located on the vacant plot between the Hiller dwelling and the Katz dwelling. This announcement, coupled with securing of the option on the opera house property, clearly indicate that the new theatre building proposition has been abandoned.

There has been no confirmation nor denial of these reports from Mr. Thompson. That he means to purchase the opera house property and to make some big improvements seems very likely. His brother, Fred Thompson, is successfully operating a motion picture theatre in Curwensville and several in Clearfield, it is said, and will be associated with J. Howard here, having the management, it is understood, if the option is closed.

T. C. Brown, who has been showing feature motion pictures, as well as booking road shows when available, for the opera house, has leased the building for another year, subject however to give up this right in case the property is sold, it is reported, and will continue to put on feature films in the opera house unless an actual sale is made.

Miner Caught by Explosion.

Lester Schreckengast, employed as a miner in one of the operations at Snow Shoe, was admitted to the Bellefonte hospital on Tuesday for treatment. He was injured about the head when caught by a blast in a "room" in the mine in which, according to an answer from the coal office of the Lehigh Valley Coal Co., "the miner had no business." His injuries consisted mostly of lacerations and powder penetrations to the skin on his face and his scalp. They were not considered serious.

Concert for Hospital Benefit.

Remember the concert of the Bellefonte Choral Society, assisted by the State College varsity quartette and orchestra, to be given in Garman's opera house on next Tuesday evening, April 15, at 8:15 o'clock. The entire proceeds is for the Bellefonte hospital. You will enjoy the program if you like good music and at the same time you will help a worthy cause.

MRS. LOUISA TOME BUSH DIED FRIDAY MORNING

Sketch of Deceased Who Is Remembered for Achievements.

A REMARKABLE WOMAN

Mrs. Louisa T. Bush, widow of Daniel G. Bush, died at her home in the apartments in the Bush Arcade on last Friday morning at 2 o'clock from heart trouble. Failing in health for some time, suffering what appeared to be a light stroke about a week before her demise and then apparently improving, her death was not wholly unexpected yet its announcement came as a surprise to the community in which she had lived a long and useful life.

A daughter of the late George Tome, in his lifetime a resident of Jersey Shore, one of the most widely known contractors in his day—builder of the old camelback bridge at Harrisburg, which was made famous by its use by Dickens in his works as well as the contractor who constructed the old Pennsylvania canal and the big dams at Lock Haven and at Williamsport, among the outstanding big jobs that he successfully completed—she came from a very widely known and successful family, to become the wife of Daniel G. Bush, a struggling lawyer of the Centre County bar who, with the assistance of his good wife, accumulated much real estate, among it some of the best in this section.

Mr. Bush died many years ago but his widow managed well and used such good business judgment that the properties were mostly cleared of encumbrances and the whole estate kept in good condition.

Among the property acquired is the very widely known Bush House, the Bush Arcade, acknowledged as one of the most substantial and attractive blocks in the town; adjoining property occupied by Twitmyer's and by Bonfatto's stores, with apartments above, the homestead dwelling and property extending from Spring street to Water street, much land in Bush Addition and Halfmoon hill, as well as a large number of houses.

Mrs. Bush was a good mother and she was a splendid friends, ever ready to aid where she knew her help was needed. She had remarkable judgment and business qualities rarely possessed by a woman. She was kind and capable but not one to be imposed upon. Coupled with these good qualities and an inherent regard for truth and simplicity was a charming social disposition that endeared her to those fortunate enough to be classed as friends. The memory of her achievements will remain as a worthy monument to her ability.

Mrs. Louisa Tome Bush was 86 years old on January 5th. Surviving are three children: Geo. T. and Mrs. E. H. B. Calloway, at home; Harry, of Medford, Oregon; and two sisters: Miss Amanda Tome, and Mrs. H. L. Moulton, both of Philadelphia. The deceased was a member of the Episcopal church. Funeral services were held from the apartments on Monday by Rev. M. De Pui Maynard and burial was made in the Union cemetery.

FIRE AT ROMOLA

Barn on Horace Fredericks Farm Destroyed on Saturday.

Romola was visited on Saturday evening by one of the biggest fires in its history when flames destroyed the barn on the Horace Fredericks farm and caused a loss roughly estimated at $5 000. The farm had just been tenanted on Monday by James McCloskey and family. The loss was partially covered by insurance by Mr. Fredericks, who resides in Lock Haven.

The fire was discovered soon after it started, about dusk, but it burned quickly and fiercely, so that all the stock could not be saved. Neighbors noticed the flames which lighted the sky for miles about, being seen in the sky as far as Milesburg and Howard. The horses were all gotten to safety but six head of cattle were burned. The small articles generally found about the barn on a big farm, also a large quantity of baled hay, about 60 bushels of wheat, over 100 bushels of oats and the harness, were burned.

The flames spread to the nearby hogpen and several nice hogs were burned. There was no breeze, the air being calm and still, so that neighbors were able to keep the flames from the house by hard and determined efforts. The cause of the fire is not known.

The barn was one of the largest in the Romola section. It was built only a few years ago by Mr. Fredericks. It is understood that he will rebuild this summer. As Mr. McCloskey did not have the implements in the barn they were not damaged.

THOUGHT IT HOLD-UP

Mrs. W. F. Reeder Collapsed in City Street as Result of Joke.

Hold-ups by thieves in city streets have become so numerous and frequent of late that even an innocent joke these days is a risky thing to undertake. As witness the experience of Mrs. Wilbur F. Reeder, of Bellefonte, while she was walking in Chestnut Street, in Philadelphia, a few days ago.

Mrs. John I. Rogers, of Philadelphia, who is well known in Bellefonte and who years ago visited several times at the Reeder home here, happened to be walking in Chestnut Street, in her home city. Glancing ahead she noticed Mrs. Reeder in the throng, just a few feet distant. Catching up to her she lightly tapped Mrs. Reeder on the shoulder and remarked:

"Your money or your life!"

Of course, Mrs. Rogers did it purely as a joke, expecting Mrs. Reeder to turn her head and discover an old friend. But Mrs. Reeder didn't do anything of the kind. As Bellefonte friends have heard the story, Mrs. Reeder was so taken by surprise, and presumably imagined that she was really being held up, that she collapsed then and there. When she had recovered from the nervous shock, and learned all about it, she indulged in a hearty laugh.

ACADEMY WANTS TROPHY CUP

Pittsburgh Tech is Getting Ready for Biggest Track Meet.

The track team of the Bellefonte Academy will make an attempt to bring home the Carnegie Trophy on May 5 at Pittsburgh when it competes in the seventh annual interscholastic meet held by Carnegie Institute of Technology.

The high quality of the Carnegie Tech Interscholastic and the stiff competition that always appears among the leading high and preparatory schools of the tri-state district have made the honor of victory the most important of the season.

Word comes from Pittsburgh that elaborate plans are under way to royally entertain the school boys entering the meet.

Barnhart—Bryan.

RESTRAINING ORDER GIVEN IN EMERICK CASE

Makes It Unlawful for College Taxi Men to Compete

HANDED DOWN BY P. S. C.

In the long tried out case in which the Emerick Motor Bus Co., represented by James C. Furst, of Bellefonte, complained of alleged unfair competition by certain taxi men and their agents, of State College, a restraining order was handed down the past week by the Public Service Commission which makes it unlawful for the taxi men and their agents to carry on such competition in the future.

The restraining order names Harry Roan, Charles Tressler, Percival Rudy, Harry Resides and their agents. It is a long typewritten order and indicates that the members of the Commission have made a full investigation of the complaints brought by the Emerick Motor Bus Co. through its attorney.

The order states that the investigations have been reported and approved. The complaints are severally sustained and the men named, as well as their agents, must forthwith cease and desist operating on a common carrier basis for trips between Bellefonte and State College of passengers provided, however, that the restraining order shall not apply where the men named, or their agents, are especially engaged to transport passengers between State College and Bellefonte. The taxi men, or their agents, are also permitted to accept special calls to come to Bellefonte to take special passengers from Bellefonte to State College.

The taxi men in question, and their agents, are further ordered not to station themselves at the P. R. R. depot or other places in Bellefonte and are restrained from soliciting for business recognized as unfair competition.

TRAIL BOOSTERS HERE FRIDAY

Lewis Daggett Making Preparations to Entertain Members.

Road enthusiasts from all important points from Elmira, N. Y., to Cumberland, Md., will attend the organization meeting of the Horseshoe Trail association, to be held at the Bush House tomorrow. Decision will be made on radiator insignia, emblems for membership cards and other important phases of the organization work.

Fruits of the recent meeting held in Altoona to revive the William Penn Highway association are now being received. Before the end of the week, this route will be well marked between Altoona and Huntingdon, while the work will be extended throughout the state.

Lewis Daggett, proprietor of the Bush House, is making preparations for entertaining 100 guests at Friday's meeting.

Real Estate Booming.

The usual spring boom in the real estate business is apparent at the office of Recorder William H. Brown. A glance at the long list of real estate transfers published this week will verify this observation. There seems to be more transfers made this spring, however, than noted for several years and the real estate business has never been more promising. Bellefonte has been showing a gradual but very gratifying growth in the past four or five years. State College has developed wonderfully during this period and it is said that at least 100 new houses and business buildings will be erected in that thriving borough this season. Philipsburg has been doing considerable building and the towns of Port Matilda, Centre Hall, Spring Mills and Millheim, have added a number of new buildings. This is all for the good of Centre County and indicates a trend toward better business which has been felt all over this great nation and which is to become even more noticeable within the next few days at least according to the optimistic reports characteristic of America's leading business men and expert statisticians. With such an outlook under a Republican administration in the face of trying odds our citizens are quietly but assuredly supporting the program and will show their appreciation when the time comes.

"Springtime."

"Springtime," a play to be put on by home talent under direction of the Rogers Producing company, with Mrs. Clarence E. Williams as local head, aided by Cecil Walker and Rachel Lambert, will be presented at the Garman opera house on the evenings of May 9 and 10. The proceeds is for the benefit of the Camp Fire Girls. Rehearsals will start on April 26th.

AS LUCKY AS POLYCRATES

Pittsburgh High School Girl Recovered Lost Ring in a Manner Really Remarkable.

If lost and found rings could talk, what interesting stories we should have! Ever since Polycrates found his lost ring in the stomach of a fish back in the Sixth century, B. C.—and doubtless even before then—lost articles, especially jewels, have "returned" in picturesque and interesting ways. Here, for example, is the story of a ring, lost only a few weeks ago, that is quite as extraordinary as that of the ring of Polycrates:

In the high school of Crafton, a suburb of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, the members of each class provide themselves with rings of special design as class mementos. A few weeks ago a girl in the senior class let one of the boys take her ring, which shortly afterward he left on a table in his room. There his aunt saw it and, supposing that it belonged to her nephew, put it on her finger and then went with a party of friends on an automobile trip.

Somewhere in Virginia 200 miles or more from Pittsburgh the tourists stopped at a watering trough by the roadside. Some time after leaving it the aunt noticed that the ring was gone. Since she did not know when it had disappeared, she made no effort to find it.

Later another party of tourists stopped at the watering trough, and a lady among them found the ring. Now here is the strange part of the story. The finder also lived in Crafton, though she was unknown to the loser. On returning home the woman showed the ring to a girl who lived next door. The girl, who was a high school pupil, at once recognized it as a senior class ring. Inside the band the woman found the initials of the owner and returned the ring to her before the girl had even discovered that it was lost!—Youth's Companion.

BRAVERY THE FIRST QUALITY

Shoshone Indians Had Little Use for Other Virtues in the Braves of the Tribe.

As war was their chief occupation, bravery was the first virtue among the Shoshone Indians of the American Northwest. None could hope to be distinguished without having given proof of it, nor could there be any preferment or influence among the nation without some warlike achievement. The important events which gave reputation to a warrior, and entitled him to a new name were: Killing a white (or grizzly) bear, stealing individually the horses of the enemy, leading a party who happened to be successful either in plundering horses or destroying the enemy, and lastly, scalping an enemy warrior.

These acts seemed of nearly equal dignity, but the last, that of taking an enemy warrior's scalp, was an honor quite independent of the act of vanquishing him. To kill one's adversary was of no importance unless the scalp was brought from the field of battle. Were a warrior to slay any number of his enemies in action, and others were to obtain the scalps or first touch the dead, they would have all the honors, since they had borne off the trophy.

The Child's Sea.

A child would take a sample of it (the sea) in a bucket, and consider that in all its aspects; and then it would know that the sea is a great many bucketfuls of water, and further that by an odd freak of destiny this water is not fit to drink. Storms and ships and sand-castles and lighthouses and all the other side-shows would follow later; but in the meantime the child would have seen the sea in a bucket, as it had previously seen the moon in a looking-glass, so would know all about it. The moon is a variable and interesting kind of lamp; the sea is buckets and buckets and buckets full of water. I think the stars are holes in a sort of black curtain or ceiling, and the sun is a piece of brightness, except at sunset or in a mist, when it is a whole Dutch cheese. The world is streets and fields and the seaside and our house.—Richard Middleton, in "Children and the Sea."

Language on Simple Basis.

The Chinese language is based on simple monosyllables, each one a complete word. The number varies from about 900 in Cantonese to about 400 in the Peking dialect, the so-called Mandarin Chinese.

These two dialects mark the two extremes of Chinese speech. Cantonese being considered the most representative of native development, while the dialect of Peking has been modified by the Manchu conquerors who were originally of Ural-Altaic or Finnish stock. Yet with all the modifications that it has undergone it still preserves its distinctive Chinese character.

Knew What to See.

A wealthy woman was told by several busybodies that her husband was in love with another woman. "Why, you can see it yourself," they said.

"No, I can't," she replied. "A young woman or a blind woman might see it, but I am fifty years old and I am not blind. I know what not to see."—Boston Transcript.

Reforming.

"When we gits too busy reformin' one another," said Uncle Eben, "we's liable to sacrifice ourselves by not checkin' up on our personal shortcomin's."

Great Conference of State's Young People in Bellefonte

Inspiring, Instructive Sessions Held on Thursday Friday and Saturday--Public Meeting at M. E. Church on Friday Evening. Will Be in Altoona Next Year.

The first annual meeting of the State Young People's Council, held in Bellefonte last Thursday, Friday and Saturday, was one of the most enthusiastic and beneficial young people's gatherings to be held in this county. A splendid spirit of co-operation and eagerness to learn to do more efficient work as a branch of the State Sabbath School Association was manifest so evidently that the more experienced workers expressed themselves without exception as considering it the best conference of Sunday School workers ever held in the state.

A large congregation attended the Methodist church on Friday evening to enjoy the popular service arranged in connection with the State Young People's Workers Conference.

Dr. Floyd Tomkins, of Phila. was the principal speaker of the evening and took as his theme, "The Bible in the Home." After paying a fitting tribute to the greatness of the American home, he expressed in a very telling manner his reasons for believing that the Bible would still further enrich the home. "It is the Book which holds the secret of forgiveness, forbearance, fellowship, courage, happiness and peace, the qualities that make for ideal home life. Do not be disturbed by the attempts of the enemies of the Bible to overthrow the sacred Scripture; for their efforts will all be in vain. Scientific and archaeological discoveries have tended to strengthen the authority and worth of the Bible." Dr. Tomkins has a host of friends who have appreciated his weekly comment on the Sunday-School lessons, and who were glad of the opportunity of listening to this splendid message.

Rev. E. H. Bonsall, state sup't. of the Young People's Department of the Sunday School association explained the workings of the present conference and of the results achieved for all the churches. He urged the Bellefonte people to support financially the new camp site, which will be located nearby, as an investment yielding rich returns in transformed youth and increased leadership for the church.

The last speaker of the evening was J. L. Alexander, who is the head of the department of Young People's Work in the International Sabbath School Association. The speaker threw a flood of light on the "Boyhood Life of Jesus" in his unfolding of the four-fold life text, Luke 2:52. Mr. Alexander has done more for young people in a religious way than perhaps any man living. As a promoter of camp conferences, he has done much to recruit leadership for Christian activities. The anthem rendered by the choir was delightful and the whole evening was one of inspiration.

Officers, workers and members alike, shared in their expressions of appreciation of the splendid treatment given in Bellefonte. Special mention was made of those who opened their homes to receive the delegates and out-of-town workers, of the women's auxiliary of the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. girls and boys of the Y. for splendid and attentive service. Most of the delegates were served their meals at the homes where they stopped, but where this was inconvenient, the guests were served meals in the Y. M. C. A., which was declared to be especially fine and well served. Pastors and officers of local churches, with special thanks to the Presbyterian and Methodist congregations for the use of their churches, as well as kind mention of the organist of the Presbyterian church and the organist and choir of the M. E. church were mentioned. S. S. Aplin, general secretary of the Y. M. C. A., looked after the entertainment and many other details, winning the gratitude of all for his unfailing courtesy and ability.

Next year the annual meeting will be held in Altoona.

Want Manager for Philipsburg.

The Council and other officials and business men of Philipsburg are giving considerable favor to the proposition of employing a borough manager. Concerning the matter, it is pointed out that Philipsburg collects in the neighborhood of $70,000 per year in taxes which is spent for current expenses and improvements. They figure it would cost $2,000 to $3,000 per year salary for a competent man, but that he would save his salary over several times.

Will Get Rid of Curve.

One of the worst curves in this state, known as the "Muleshoe Curve," located near an Altoona reservoir on the highway leading to Cresson, will be obviated by what is known to road engineers as a "submerged culvert." Work is now in progress and the road will be 40 feet wide at the curve, where a number of persons have been killed or fatally injured in automobile accidents.

SAVE 13½% on coal

TESTS have shown that over-coating an old frame house with Portland Cement stucco effects a saving of 13½% on coal. Add to this the saving on painting expense and the continual little repairs that permanence eliminates.

Many old homes cannot be improved on for general appearance, general comfort. But permanence and upkeep saving can be added at small cost. Ask your building material dealer how.

Twenty-five Million Dollars' worth of New Equipment will be added to the Bell System in Pennsylvania this year

HALF a million miles of new wire, thirty-five new building operations, seventy thousand new telephones, ten million dollars' worth of central office equipment—such is our program for 1923.

And all this in addition to the tremendous amounts of new plant added in the last three years, which was more than in any six previous years in Pennsylvania's telephone history.

There is an enormous demand for telephone service. Twenty-five million dollars in one year is our effort to meet this demand.

C. W. Heilhecker Local Manager

Featuring John Colby, Jr.

By GRACE R. OLIN

(©, 1923, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

The Colbys were at breakfast. The head of the house, John Colby, Sr., scowled over his morning paper and snatched bits of toast and coffee in between.

Mrs. Colby, pink-cheeked and placid, beamed on her family and all contentedly.

Miss Mabel and Miss Clarissa (a trifle pale, the result of a dance the evening before) consulted their wrist watches and yawned gracefully.

The remaining member of the household, Mr. John Colby, Jr. (more frequently called Johnnie), was to all appearances in a day dream over his oatmeal.

But, then, Johnnie was pink-cheeked and placid, like his mother, and only 16 into the bargain. And 16 is very likely to have day dreams, any time. 'Twas Miss Mabel who broke the silence.

"Ma, I can't find my gymnasium bloomers, and I'll need them tonight for basketball."

"And ma," Miss Clarissa shrilled, "I can't locate my black silk stockings, my best ones, with the yellow C on each instep. And I'll want them this afternoon. I'm going out."

"Must be where you put them, girls, but I'll see if I can find them for you both." Even an extra task on Saturday morning failed to ruffle Mrs. Colby.

At this point, Mr. Colby, Jr., seemed to emerge suddenly from his day dream had become seized with silent, but hearty mirth.

"Funny, isn't it?" Miss Mabel glared at her brother.

"I don't see anything to laugh at," said Miss Clarissa, abruptly rising.

Five minutes later, having kissed their mother and patted their father's shoulder, they permitted the front door to be closed upon them.

To All Appearances In a Day Dream.

Colby, Sr., dropped his paper and looked after them, fondly.

"Splendid daughters, my dear splendid daughters," he said to his wife. "Never have they given us a moment's uneasiness. And ambitious! Why, those girls wouldn't miss a day's work if they could.

"I wish I had more money to give them, more advantages, and better surroundings. Did you know, my dear, that both the girls are as keen for the white bungalow on the hill as you are?

"Oh, well, I suppose we must be content with what we have, but I do wish, mother, that Haskell would give me that manager's job, then we might live the way we would like."

"Now, John," Mrs. Colby shook her soft curls at him, "don't you go to dreaming, dear. I have you and the children, and I am happy. We can't have everything we want in this world, and, really, the white bungalow doesn't matter so very much.

"And don't be fretting, John, about getting that manager's position. Mr Haskell will choose someone who can dress well and has a college education."

"Ma said it, pa." John, Jr., drained his glass of milk and pushed his chair back languidly. Colby, Sr., regarded his son with evident disapproval.

"John," he said, "I wish you wouldn't eat and drink so much. It isn't good for you."

Mr. Colby, Sr., pushed his chair under the table with an irritable little gesture.

"Now, after you have done your outside chores," he added, "you come down town to the office. I may be able to get you in this summer vacation, and a little knowledge of the way things are run won't hurt you."

"Sorry, pa," the boy's clear eyes met his father's, "but we're putting on a show in high school this afternoon and we have a dress rehearsal this morning.

"It's a corking show, pa; can't you come. Mother's coming. I wrote the thing and I'm directing it. I named it 'Hamlet Up-to-Date.'

"And, pa," the boy paused, his hand on the door, "I don't want to know your business. I would never like it and I'd rather do something else this summer.

"Well, so long. If you come, pa, just ask for me at the door; they'll let you in."

For a moment Colby, Sr., stood watching the departing form of his son.

"That seems to be that young man's program nowadays, my dear," he said, slipping into his coat: "Eat and put on shows and in between times ride around with Dr. Burleigh. I presume he aspires to either a chauffeur or an actor. I wish he were as steady as the girls."

"Mabel is 21 and Clarissa 23, John," Mrs. Colby said quietly. "Johnnie is only a boy."

"That's right, Nettie, pamper him," exploded her husband. "Go to his fool shows and encourage him, and see what you'll get for it." Mrs. Colby, clearing up the breakfast things, only laughed as her husband strode indignantly down the path.

It was after 1 o'clock when Mr. James Haskell stopped beside Colby, Sr.'s, desk.

"Take a half holiday, Colby," he said. "I'm going to, for the first time in years. The youngsters are putting on a show, I understand, and as a member of the school board I deem it only right to patronize and be interested."

Thirty minutes later Mr. Colby, having hastily swallowed some lunch, crept guiltily up the stairs of High School hall.

Having deposited his ticket with a dapper youth, he allowed himself to be led down the darkened aisle. When his eyes grew more accustomed to the semi-darkness, he saw with a start his wife and the Haskells sitting side by side.

Close upon this discovery came a shriek and, allowing his eyes to wander towards the stage, he beheld his son and heir resplendent in Miss Mabel's gymnasium bloomers and Miss Clarissa's best silks, those with the yellow C's.

"Do you know, Colby," said Haskell, wiping his eyes, "it's done me more good than all the money I've ever spent for medicine. A sense of humor is a great asset in life."

"Mrs. Colby," he said, turning to where she and Mrs. Haskell were chatting, "I believe your husband is just the man I need for manager, someone who doesn't take things too seriously, someone who can bring a boy up to laugh."

It was a joyous little group that awaited the coming of Colby, Jr., for supper. The Misses Mabel and Clarissa had been told the delightful news and were properly enthusiastic.

Mr. Colby had with his own hands filled the milk pitcher and stood it by Johnnie's plate. Also, the whipped cream pie was his offering as well.

"Say, ma," said Johnnie, after he had apologized to his sisters, "there was a moving picture producer there today, and he's going to give me enough for the play to buy the white bungalow you've always wanted, and there'll be enough left over to put me through college. So now I can be a doctor, like Dr. Burleigh, just as I've always wanted to be."

"Son," Colby, Sr., spoke in a choked sort of voice, "can't you put on 'Othello' and smother Desdemona with your mother's green pillow, the one with the cabbage roses on it?"

"You said it, pa," responded Colby, Jr.

LAUGHED AT POWER OF MAN

Alaskan Winds Made Mockery of Explorers' Efforts to Safeguard Themselves Against It.

Wind strong enough to pick up a man and carry him off was one of the things that the party that explored the Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes, Alaska, had to contend with. On one occasion at the top of Baked mountain they used 5,000 feet of rope and cord to lash the tent; but at night when a big storm struck them the wind snapped the poles, and the thing was wrecked. Then a terrible hail of pumice confined the explorers to what little shelter the remains of the tent provided, and there they spent the night in agony, waiting for the storm to abate or for daylight to come so that they could see to make a dash down the valley. At last the light came, but before the party was ready to start one of the men came out, and the wind literally carried him away.

Feeling that it was of the utmost importance to keep together—thus Mr. Robert F. Griggs, director of the expedition, writes in the National Geographic Magazine—made frantic efforts to detain him, but he was gone like a ghost in the night, out of earshot almost at once. I turned my efforts to hurrying the others. To face the gale was impossible, so I started backing toward the tent, bracing myself against the wind. Suddenly I found myself flying through the air, scared to death. I shall never forget the feeling of gratitude I experienced when my face landed in the mud two gullies away. The feeling that I was being carried bodily down the valley by the wind was one of the most terrible experiences of my life.

New Banjo Accessories.

Two banjo accessories, a clothing guard and an adjustable bridge, are now available, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. The former consists of an elastic pad which fits over the brackets and nuts of the instrument, thus preventing any wear and tear on the garments. The latter may be adjusted to different heights and has notches of various depths, on both sides, by means of which all members of the banjo "family" can be accommodated.

NO CHANCE TO WIN WAGER

Boastful Bicyclist Deserved Laugh With Which He Was Greeted After Unsuccessful Effort.

A cyclist was boasting about his abilities as a rider. So strongly did he hold forth that the landlord of the village inn decided to make a wager with him.

"Look here, mister," he said, "I bet you can't ride up and down this street till the church clock has struck six."

The cyclist looked at the clock. It was 5:15.

"Done!" he said, and started. After a long time, he shouted to some villagers, who stood watching in amazement: "Has the church clock struck yet?"

"No," came the answer. "It never does."—London Tit-Bits.

DID THE DOG UNDERSTAND?

Hard Otherwise to Explain the Remarkable Action of Collie Owned by Scottish Farmer.

To illustrate the remarkable faithfulness and intelligence of collie dogs, a reader relates the following story:

"A Scottish farmer, sitting over the fire one night with his mother, told her that he intended making a journey to a certain place the following day. He did not think he would take his dog. To this his mother agreed, the dog being present at the time.

"Next morning the collie was nowhere to be seen when his master set out. The young man left his house and forded a river, after which the whereabouts of the dog was no longer a mystery. On the top of a hill beyond the river sat the collie, wet through, and calmly awaiting the arrival of his master."

Had he listened to the conversation overnight and, being determined not to be left behind, swam the river and so made sure of going the journey?

A Tame Sea Gull.

A Vancouver pilot had a strange experience the other day.

He heard a bird screaming wildly in a lane behind his house, and, when he went to see what was the matter, to his surprise an enormous gray gull, still screaming, flew up and perched itself on his shoulder.

As soon as he had recovered from his shock the pilot took the gull into his house, and regaled it with hard biscuits, milk, pork and bacon. It seemed thoroughly to enjoy its feed, and when it had finished its repast it gave a little scream, as if to say "Thank you," and soared away to sea.

Saved by Presence of Mind.

Quick thinking on the part of an automobile driver probably saved a trio of lives at Woodstock, Ont. With two companions he was about to drive across the main line of the C. P. R. tracks when he saw a passenger train bearing down on him, he turned the car and raced down the track in front of the train, giving the engineer time to slacken the speed before hitting the auto and sending it a hundred feet or so. The back of the car was badly smashed in but the three occupants escaped with minor injuries.

Shoe Sole Had Petrified.

In Nevada a petrified shoe sole was discovered in a rock by a mining engineer. At first he thought it was a human footprint, but closer inspection showed that it was a shoe sole which had been truned into stone. The forepart was missing, but there was the outline of at least two-thirds of the sole, and around this outline ran a well-defined sewn thread, which had, it appeared, attached the welt to the sole.

Reserved Reward for Goose.

Over 30 years old a goose has established a record at Tufall farm, Beulah, England. She has reared 10 to 18 geese annually and last year supplied the Christmas market with 10. Her owner has decided to allow her to die a natural death as a reward for faithful service.

Killed in Peculiar Accident.

While watching a hockey game at Portland, Me., a man had his jugular vein severed by the skate of a player and bled to death. He was leaning over the boards as two players collided, the skate of one striking him just below the ear.

She Loved the Snow

By MYRA CURTIS LANE

(©, 1923, Western Newspaper Union.)

HER elders watched her from the window anxiously. "Children love to play in the snow, don't they!" said the visitor.

"Laura's so happy with her sled, giving the other children a ride," answered the mother. "I haven't the heart to call her in. It's funny how she's always liked the snow, ever since she used to stretch out her little hands to it before she could talk."

The child loved the snow. She was born with a love of nature, but especially of nature in winter. She loved to walk in the snow through the woods and dream her childish dreams there. She was an odd child, very quiet and obedient. People loved her, but they never understood her.

The play-days passed. She was now a young woman. She helped her mother in the house. She was an only daughter. Her brother had gone West. Laura was not likely to marry. She was not the kind of girl that attracts men. They were a little afraid of her. She was "odd."

The young Englishman who lived in the village for a time knew differently. He was the son of a rich man, he had left home after a quarrel with his father, but they had been reconciled, and they were begging him to come back.

"I love you!"

Laura always remembered that he said that when it was beginning to snow—little pearly flakes falling softly down from the skies.

"Do you love me, Laura?"

"I—I'll tell you tomorrow," Laura whispered, and fled from him.

From him? From love. From love that was thenceforward always to be associated with the snow.

She taught in the schools, and was the sole support of her mother; her brother had never been heard of again. Her mother needed her.

Only that night she had one of her heart attacks. She might live for years, the doctor said, but she must not overwork herself.

Which was it to be? All her nature, denied love, was clamoring for this fulfillment of herself, which had suddenly opened as a possibility.

In the end duty triumphed. She met her lover next day.

"You must go home, dear," she said, "and wait. Let your love prove itself, and then—then we'll see what can be done."

She told him that she could not leave her mother, but, if his love proved staunch, he could wait.

Perhaps a way might be found.

He tried to alter her decision in vain. He went across the snow protesting that his love would never change.

She had two letters from him—then silence—a year afterward a wedding announcement.

That year her mother died. The snow was falling hard on the black hearse.

Two years later Laura married. It was not love, but then—love had gone forever, and why should one sacrifice one's life for vain regrets? She was fond of her husband. They were married in June's hard, brilliant sunshine. There was hardly any snow that winter.

After that the years went very fast, very inexorably. Laura was no longer "odd." She was spoken of as a capable housewife. Only in a tiny corner of her heart did she keep her queer thoughts and notions.

There were three or four children, growing up. Nobody would have dreamed that Laura still grieved for the first little body that had been laid to rest in the churchyard under its canopy of snow. Nobody knew that sometimes, when the snow lay very thick, Laura went to the little grave and was glad that it was warmly covered.

People must not be "fanciful." Not, at least, until old age brings back a second childhood.

Old age was creeping on. Her husband was dead. The children had gone out into the world. The old woman, comfortably well off, lived her own interior life again now. Sometimes, oddly, she fancied that she was the little girl who had played in the snow. She would have liked to have gone out with the sled.

She felt the unity of the spirit beneath all the vicissitudes of life. She was still that little girl—and the girl who had met her lover in the woods. And she was one with the little body in the churchyard, too. It was all one—all happiness of unity with the universal spirit, if one only knew.

"Grandmother's always dreaming in that corner," the youngsters said.

Laura sat dreaming, and watching the falling snow. It was good to have lived, in spite of everything.

Red Color in Solar Salt and Brine.

A note in Science calls attention to a possible cause of the red color in solar salt and brine. Recent investigations tend to indicate that the color is due to micro-organisms that thrive in a media containing not less than 15 per cent of salt by weight, and one in which the most favorable temperature is between 50 and 60 degrees Centigrade.—Scientific American.

American cars are very popular in Sweden and are generally preferred to the heavier European types, and a large proportion of that country's 40,000 cars are of American make. There is a big market in Sweden for medium and low-priced American cars.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

When you want a cake especially nice try the following: Candied cherries are expensive unless you have put them up yourself. Pour hot water over a pound of candied cherries, let stand a few minutes then drain and set into the oven to become dry. Soak one-half pound of crustless bread in as much milk as it will absorb; add four beaten eggs, four tablespoonfuls of sugar, four tablespoonfuls of warm butter, one-fourth of a pound of boiled and grated chestnuts, and a dusting of cinnamon. When well-mixed add the cherries, pour into a buttered shallow pan, brush generously with butter, sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon, and bake slowly in a moderate oven. Serve with a cupful of hot chocolate.

Luncheon Eggs.—Wash and chop one-fourth of a pound of mushrooms; melt one tablespoonful of butter in a saucepan, add the mushrooms and stir until all the moisture is evaporated; add one tablespoonful of flour, blend well, then add one-half cupful of chicken stock, one-fourth of a teaspoonful of salt, and a little pepper; let boil two minutes. Cut in halves six hard-cooked eggs, remove the yolks and mix them with the mushroom sauce. Fill the eggs with this mixture and set them into a baking dish, surround with tomato sauce and heat thoroughly. Just before serving place a fillet of cardine on each stuffed egg. Serve from the baking dish.

Sardine Salad.—Skin and bone a dozen sardines, add a cupful of mashed, hard-cooked egg yolks, two tablespoonfuls each of chopped olives and celery, a pinch of dry mustard, and lemon juice to moisten. Mix and form into balls, roll in boiled rice. Arrange around a mound of stuffed olives and serve garnished with roses of mayonnaise.

A good breakfast dish is buttered toast served with hot stewed tomatoes, seasoned well with butter, salt and pepper. The tomatoes will have a better flavor if well-cooked with the seasoning and add a little water while cooking.

Cheerfulness is the daughter of employment. I have known men come home from a funeral in great spirits, just because they had had the management of it.—Horne.

EARLY SPRING SALADS

The following salad is made when fresh tomatoes cannot be procured or are too expensive:

Glace Tomato Salad.—Dissolve one-eighth of a box of gelatine in a little cold water. Measure half a can of tomatoes, put through a sieve to remove seeds. Season with pepper and salt, heat until boiling, then pour over the gelatine. Put into cups or molds to harden. Remove and place on lettuce leaves with a spoonful of mayonnaise on top of each.

Baked Apple Salad.—Choose a good-sized apple of good variety, such as the Northern Spy. Bake until well done and the skin is loose from the apple. When cool remove the skin and stuff the apple center with nuts. Serve with whipped cream or on lettuce with mayonnaise dressing.

Fruit Salad.—Cut in dice three mellow apples, remove the pulp from three oranges. Blanch a cupful of almonds and shred them, dice one cupful of pineapple. Mix all these ingredients and serve on lettuce with a mayonnaise dressing. Garnish with halves of walnut meats and candied cherries.

Celery and nuts cut fine, using one-half as much nuts in measure as celery, add French dressing, let stand for an hour and serve on lettuce.

Lily Salad.—Cut hard-boiled egg whites into petal-shaped pieces, leaving the yolk perfectly whole. Rub each yolk with butter, mustard and vinegar, mixed well. Serve on beds of cress or cooked spinach with mayonnaise for dressing.

Chestnut Salad.—Mix a little sweet cream into a cream cheese with some finely-chopped sweet green pepper. Divide into pieces and roll in cracker crumbs that have been browned. Shape in the form of chestnut burrs and insert a cooked chestnut in each. Serve with mayonnaise.

The parsnip is especially good served with boiled meats. Sliced or diced cooked parsnips are very good baked in a white sauce as are escalloped potatoes.

They sail, they sail—those lighted ships—
Star-schooners out and on,
Cold eddy of the last thought slips
Smooth at their keel and is gone . . .

Proud they come down on winds unsped
With aught but the cold scent
Of space, to keep (who knows?) what tryst
Beyond the firmament?

The ultimate spume of light will toss
Upon their sails, and fall
Pearl-spray, to leave dark sheets that cross
Seas with no light at all.

Ghost-craft they steal—how far, how far!—
In what black foam, with stem
Plunging in the wine-dark seas that are
The years that plunge with them.

On, on they steer, span after span,
And only find to lose
What seemed the star Aldebaran
In the shadow of Betelgeuse.

On still; and time—a bowstring—drawn
With a deep sigh must break,
And sink with scattered dark and dawn
Soundlessly in their wake.

On still and out; and space will drop—
Back, back; and the dark host
Anchor where thought itself must stop—
But beyond thought drives the ghost.

GOT SECRETS BY WIRELESS

Ingenious Contrivance by Which Business Rivals Received Information of High Importance.

The members of an important business circle which meets once a week to discuss large transactions were mystified recently to find that the results of their deliberations were known to the outside world even during the process of meetings held behind closed doors.

For some time no solution of the mystery could be found, but one day a curious belt was seen to have slipped down below the vest of one of their number.

He insisted at first that it was a support recommended by his doctor, but eventually admitted that it was a miniature wireless transmitting set.

The belt contained the necessary batteries arranged like cartridges in a bandelier; the aerial was a long coil of wire stitched into his vest. In his coat pocket was a tapping key which worked a muffled buzzer.

The signals sent out by the apparatus were, of course, very weak indeed, but they were easily picked up by a large and extremely sensitive valve receiver situated in an office across the street.

The leakage was explained at once. The offender was ejected minus his body belt—which was kept as a souvenir.

New Sugar Cane.

The variety of sugar cane known as S. C. 12-4, produced by the federal agricultural experiment station in the Virgin islands, is considered very promising. Recent reports to the United States Department of Agriculture from a plantation in Porto Rico to which cuttings were sent for testing say that the original two and one-half acres planted to this variety have been extended to 200 for the present year. Several of the fields are estimated to yield 60 tons of cane per acre, which, with the average sucrose and purity of the juice, should give nearly 11 tons of 96 per cent sugar per acre. The original field is now giving a fourth ratoon crop that averages 20 tons of cane per acre. A profitable fourth ratoon crop has never before been produced on the plantation with any other variety.

MADE KNOWN THEIR WANTS

How Our Ancestors of Colonial Times Advertised for the Better Halves They Desired.

Getting a wife through advertising was employed as a method in colonial days. This is an advertisement from the Boston Evening News for February 23, 1759:

"To the Ladies. Any young Lady between the Age of Eighteen and twenty three of a Midling Stature; brown Hair; regular Features; and a Lively, Brisk Eye. Of Good Morals & not Tinctured with anything that may Sully so Distinguishable a Form; possessed of 3 or 400£ entirely of her own Disposal and where there will be no necessity of going Through the tiresome Talk of addressing Parents or Guardians for Their Consent; Such an one by leaving a Line directed for A. W. at the British Coffee House in King Street appointing where an Interview may be had will meet a Person who flatters himself he shall not be thought Disagreeable by any Lady answering the above description. N. B. Profound Secrecy will be observ'd. No Trifling Answers will be regarded."

How to Make Invisible Ink.

A solution of equal parts of sulphate of copper and sal ammoniac in water writes J. Greig in the Boy's Own Paper, gives an invisible writing, which appears in yellow characters when heat is applied. Writing done with sulphate of copper dissolved alone comes forth in a fine blue when held over the mouth of an ammonia bottle.

A solution of sulphate of iron, when used for writing, may be developed black by infusion of oak-galls or by a solution of tannin; by applying instead a solution of yellow prussiate of potash it is brought out in blue.

The solution of prussiate of potash when used for writing, can, of course be developed in blue by reversing the process, but by using solution of sulphate of copper to develop, the writing appears red.

Why Trees Can Defy Storm.

There has been a very interesting suggestion concerning the utility to a tree of the irregular arrangement of its branches. Watching a large plane tree during a gale, an observer noted that while one great limb swayed in one direction, another swayed the opposite way, and although all the branches were plunging and bending before the blast, they did not move in unison, or all at once in the same direction. But for the peculiarity in the motion of the branches, it is thought, the tree could not have escaped uprooting; and the investigator suggests that this kind of balancing serves in general to protect large trees, like oaks and beeches which have their branches unsymmetrically placed, from being overturned by high winds.—Washington Star.

One of War's Greatest Foes.

The newly elected commander of the Santa Ann post of the Veterans of Foreign Wars in Boise, Idaho, George T. Fleet, has the following war record, taken from official records: Enlisted in 1913, served on the Mexican border with Eighteenth infantry; went to France with the first boatload of American soldiers, arriving June 27, 1917; first wounded in action October 17, 1917, and later wounded six other times and gassed twice. Was in all engagements with the First division, and rose from enlisted man to the rank of captain in the regular army on June 10, 1918. Decorated with the distinguished service cross, French Legion of Honor, French croix de guerre, and after the armistice hospitaled to the United States as a "nervous breakdown," and later retired, April 18, 1921, for disability. He is now on active duty with the officers' reserve corps.

How ... Session Originated.

In the old Anglo-Saxon language the word "mad" was used as a synonym for violent, furious, angry, or venomous. In some parts of England, and in the United States particularly, it is still used in this sense. After was the Anglo-Saxon name for an adder, or viper. The proverbial saying has therefore probably no reference to hat makers but merely means "as venomous as an adder."

Boy Victim of Savage Horse.

Climbing into a field to retrieve a cricket ball a boy living at Burton-on-Trent, England, was terribly mauled by a horse. As soon as he entered the field the horse seized him and shook him, threw him on the ground and kicked his head. Some of the cricketers hurried to the rescue and picked him ... unconscious.

The sale season is over and a summary shows that prices were generally fair. Farm machinery was bid in at good prices. Cows at $75 to $100 were not unusual. Hogs, especially nice shoats, were in strong demand and brought good prices. Horses seemed to be least in demand and sold at prices ranging from 20 to 25 per cent lower than paid during the past several years.

The W. B. Mingle property in Centre Hall was purchased by George Searson, of Linden Hall, who has quit the farm and will devote his time to operating several threshing and baling outfits in Penn's valley. The Mingle property has changed ownership several times in the past few years. It was sold by the Mingle heirs to George E. Heckman for $4,700. Mr. Heckman sold it to Dr. G. I. Yearick and he in turn sold it to Mr. Searson, who paid $5,000.

An indication that State College is growing is evident to an observer who may chance to walk over the streets of the neighbor town. Preparations for about 100 new houses are being made and all are to be erected this coming summer, according to the "State College Times." Commenting in an editorial, the paper states, "If you've enough of the long green to start that new home, there's little use in waiting in the hope that prices will come down; there's no sign of any reductions, but advances in some lines."

William and Guy Sankey, hunters from Osceola Mills, recently sentenced to serve time in jail when convicted of assault and battery alleged to have been committed in the last hunting season when the men were caught trespassing upon lands of a game preserve in Rush and Taylor townships, were paroled last Thursday by Judge Henry C. Quigley. They had been sentenced to serve nine months and served a little over one month. Fines of $500 imposed on each were remitted but the men were obliged to pay costs of prosecution. Sentencing of the man at the February Term of Court was followed by a flood of appeals from the home town of the hunters and their general makeup, with some other details which Judge Quigley said had been learned recently, had much to do with his decision to parole the men. He advised them hereafter to steer clear of leased lands.

TEMPTING FRUIT BLOSSOMS

"Consider the Farmer" Before Plucking Them.

"Consider the Farmer" is a message to the town and city dwellers of Centre County, coming from the county Farm Bureau office. Hundreds of dollars of damage is caused each spring through unintentional acts of autoists and hikers who like to get out into the country on a day's outing in the spring of the year.

A spray of apple, peach or cherry blossoms, to be used as a house decoration in the city home, is a great temptation to a motorist passing a tree in full bloom and out of sight to the farm house. Those tempted are likely to overlook the fact that hundreds of others on the same day might be struck with the same fancy.

The Farm Bureau office points out that the farmer has a hard enough time these days making ends meet with his pruning and spraying of fruit trees, picking and packing the fruit and marketing it. The armful of blossoms carried away by an auto party may mean a bushel or two of apples lost to the grower; a group of boys can thoughtlessly lose him a bushel of peaches, and a crate of cherries may be represented in the armsfull of blossoms that cannot be resisted by a group of young men and women hikers. Springtime in the country is a good time to observe the "Golden Rule" says the State College agricultural extension representative.

Fenton Richie Dead.

Fenton A. Ritchie, formerly of Erie and of late a resident of Williamsport, where he died on April 2, was laid to rest in the Disciple cemetery at Blanchard last Thursday by the side of his wife, whose maiden name was Cordie Wensels a daughter of the late Geo. A. and Mrs. Wensel. Mr. Ritchie was an expert machinist and frequently visited at Blanchard and that vicinity where he was quite well known.

Mrs. John Graden Dead.

Mrs. John Graden died at her home in Spring Mills on Wednesday afternoon after a week's illness from cold and heart trouble. Mrs. Graden was well advanced in years and her weakened constitution was unable to withstand the severe attack of illness. She is survived by her husband and two children, John and Mrs. Elizabeth Foust, both of Spring Mills. Funeral services will be held on Saturday and burial made at Spring Mills.

Many Forest Tree Seedlings.

District Foresterer William F. Dague, of Clearfield, reports that approximately 2,250,000 trees will be shipped from the Clearfield nursery this spring. All of these trees will be distributed free of charge by the department of forestry to private planters throughout the state. The only expense the planters must meet is the cost of packing and shipping, which rarely exceeds 75 cents per thousand.

Auto Hit Pole.

C. M. Boegin (colored), of Lock Haven, and a companion were given a shaking up but escaped injury when their automobile struck a telephone pole in front of the James McClure property on Spring street. The men had just returned from State College and lost control of their car as they drove around the corner from Pine street. They were enroute to their home.

Mill Hall Park to Open.

The park is popular to many from lower Nittany valley, Mill Hall, Lock Haven and lower Bald Eagle valley.

Victory for National Banks.

The Pennsylvania Supreme Court this week handed down a decision that national banks in this State have the right to act as administrator, executor, etc., and handle trust funds for estates.

The Secret of the Attic

By MORRIS SCHULTZ

(©, 1923, Western Newspaper Union.)

THE old attic must have known innumerable secrets, for the house was nearly a century old. It had passed through many hands before it came into those of the Batemans. Ed Bateman was a chief clerk with a big stockbroking firm, Annie Bateman was a good housekeeper; there was a boy, Cyril, and a girl, Millie.

A very ordinary family; but Grandfather Bateman was different. Had always been different. A dreamer and inventor, whose son was supporting him in his old age, much to his wife's disgust. Annie Bateman was busy all day long over her housework, and she resented the presence of the old man.

At first Grandfather Bateman had the best room in the house. Annie drove him out of that with her cleaning and meddling, and so a room on the second floor was turned over to him. But even then Grandfather Bateman was always in the way. And horrible smells came from his room, where he was dabbling in his futile chemical experiments which were in some mysterious way to make them all rich some day. So at last the attic was given to him.

There he lived, slept, walked, did everything but eat. And Grandfather Bateman was happier up there than in any other part of the Bateman house. The old attic, at first grudgingly, and then gladly, gave up its secrets to him.

Here, it told him, a little boy had dreamed great things—a little boy who would have been President some day—if he hadn't died. And here a young girl had fled, the night before her wedding, to wonder whether marriage was going to mean happiness for her, and to dream over the lover she had lost long before.

Here, too, an old woman used to sit sometimes, one of the original builders of the house, turning over piles of children's clothing, and wondering what had happened to the wearers of the little shoes—whether they could really be the men and women who came back to see her, once in a while, from the great outside world.

And here Grandfather Bateman continued his experiments that were to bring fame and fortune to all of them.

His rubber formula—his method of manufacturing synthetic rubber that would revolutionize the rubber industry—it was almost perfected. It was the burning rubber that filled the house with smells and had been the cause of grandfather's banishment to the attic. Sheets and sheets of paper, covered with formulae, lay on grandfather's old desk. Grandfather was running up huge electric light bills. He worked into the small hours of the morning.

"Ed, you'll have to put a stop to this," said Annie Bateman. "The house is full of smells all the time; I declare, I'm ashamed to bring people into it. Do you know, I think your father's gone out of his mind, with his mania about money."

"Oh, let the old man alone," answered Ed. "It amuses him and doesn't hurt us."

Annie Bateman frowned. She could not bear the idea of that dilapidated old attic, into which she had peered occasionally. It was like a pigstye. Some day she meant to clean up the whole place. If grandfather had to have his mania, at any rate it should be carried on in a clean attic.

"I'm going into town tomorrow to see a man about my invention," said grandfather at the supper table.

"Hope he buys it," answered Ed, winking at his wife.

Then and there Annie Bateman came to a resolve. While the old man was in town she would put the attic "to rights."

He set off next morning in high spirits, and Annie started in to make a gala day of it. She went up to the attic with waste-basket, broom, mops, pails of water, and all the artillery for her campaign. She scoured the attic from end to end. She emptied all the jars and retorts of their evil-smelling mixtures. Every scrap of paper was taken down to the furnace and burned.

"Well, I think he's going to buy," said grandfather, when he came home. "He says if the invention's genuine it means a hundred thousand cold cash. We'll all be rich."

Ed winked at Annie. "Go to it, dad," he said.

Grandfather went up into the attic. He stood still, staggered, wounded almost to death. Everything was gone, every scrap of paper, his treasured formula, his hopes, his dreams, the work of twenty years. Never again could he begin and rediscover that elusive thing that he had dragged out of the treasure-house of Nature.

He sank down with a groan and hid his face in his hands.

And that was the latest secret that the attic hid.

"Hankies" Banned.

Handkerchiefs were once banned by law. The handkerchief had a stormy reception in Germany. Nearly eighty years elapsed between their first appearance at Venice and their adoption by the Germans. They first used them in 1580, and shortly afterwards sumptuary laws were enacted in most German states forbidding any person of plebeian birth from blowing his or her nose with a handkerchief. This restriction remained in force for over two centuries. As recently as 1790 an actress was threatened with prosecution for disregarding it when playing in a Berlin theater. She pleaded in defense that she had not used a handkerchief—only "a little linen rag."

Counting Her Children

By MARTHA WILLIAMS

(©, 1923, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Leota ran down the orchard path, lifting, and timing her steps to her chant:

"Mister Bluster he loves sugar and tea,
Mister Bluster he loves candy;
Mister Bluster he can wheel and turn
And bow to the ladies han-dy!
Coffee grows on sugar trees,
Rivers run with bran-dee!
The rocks and the hills are washed in gold,
And the gals are—as sweet as— can-dy!"

Stop! That thing is indictable in this prohibition era!" Major Lee said, rising upon his one elbow to frown at his young cousin. "Wonder could reincarnation be made to work backward?" he went on. "If it could I'd try it—sure and certain."

"Whereabout would you get off in Time's backward flight?" Leota asked.

He sighed, "You're quite too sudden. The fault of extreme youth. But—let me see! I think about seventy years back, when great grandad had his own orchard, own still, own bees, and made every year lashin's of peach and honey—if he was a preacher."

"Pf! Don't be such a piker!" Leota reprimanded, "why not go to court—drink with the regent—or even King Charles! Every noble damsel had a still-room all her own in those brave days."

"But somehow, I don't fancy mead and metheglin and such, by report. Give me 'brown October ale,' a cellarful, laid down when I was born, to be broached when I came of age," the major said, sighing reflectively. Leota smiled at him—but somehow her lips quivered the least as she quoted:

"When it came ter slaughter,
You will do your work on water,
An' you'll like the bloomin' boots of 'im that got it."

"Stop!" the major cried imperatively, springing half upright. "You—you make me remember—and I must forget."

"I'm sorry—so sorry," Leota whispered tremulously. "Do forgive me; I didn't think—"

"I need to be forgiven—for cowardice," her cousin interrupted. "I am ashamed of myself—"

"You mustn't be. I know," the girl said soothingly, rising and holding a hand to help him to his feet. He would not take it, but came upright at last in a hard, scrambling struggle, yet smiled at her, saying: "Young woman, understand I'm not a puling infant, neither quite senile; stop babying me or I'll lose my amiability."

"He Doesn't Agree With You."

"I don't believe you're a man of full age and judgment," Leota cried, eager to meet his change of mood. "If you were, you'd surely be sitting pretty, all day and every day, 'longside Miss Josep Mackin. She's willin' as daylight—also ready and waitin'. And she has got two hundred thousand mighty sound dollars—and a father, let us hope, in Heaven. Don't you feel it your duty to fetch that money into the family?"

"Why marry money? I shall have my pension—when I ask for it. Also a bonus—if I live till then," the major retorted, swelling out his chest and clinching his single hand. Leota shook her head at him, saying plaintively: "You're not thinking of your cruelty—to her. Think of what she suffers—her bobbed hair in curl papers every night, and a dough-face to take off her freckles.

"I see I must speak to your mother—you're running wild—talking so of your elders and betters," the major admonished. Leota made a face at him but ran on: "She's real good-hearted—I mean to be nicer'n pie to her when you make her my Cousin Josie. Say—when do you propose?"

"When I get the bonus—or the Greek Kalends—any old time, almost," the major laughed.

Leota eyed him severely, saying, with pursed lips: "Oh, it's all right—the bonus is comin'—same as the end of the world. No need to worry nor hurry—I'm sort of countin' on it to put by boys through college."

"Your boys!" the major exploded. "How dare you name such things? Don't you know all your grandmothers for generations are blushing for you? Girls are not supposed to know anything about such subjects—till they go and happen."

But kindly twinkles of deep brown eyes belied his words. Leota twinkled back at him, saying demurely: "The graunies all happened—and you and me and all the rest of the world. I don't talk such stuff outside the family—but I have a heap of good times thinking over my children—what they will be, what I'll do for them—and how proud we'll be of each other."

"Settled on their names yet?" the major asked, not quite steadily.

Leota laughed softly, "Not quite," she said. "But what I'm sure of is—wanting twins for the oldest—so I can name them both for you. The eldest, of course, will be Carroll—but I'm a bit afraid I shall love little Dan best—"

"Mother used to call me little Dan," the major interrupted, breathing hard.

Leota nodded. "Mammy Nicey does still," she said. "She tells us all she's most a hundred, but ain't gwine die untwell she sees ernudder little Dan."

"Have you told Nelson Dabney your family plans?" the major asked, trying hard to smile.

Leota shook her head. "I told you this didn't get outside the family: Nelson is a joy and a blessing—but he'll know—soon enough."

"He is a fine lad—I'm glad he was born just a year late for—the massacring," Major Lee said, his lips shutting hard.

"He doesn't agree with you; it's his big grief—he rails at Fate and the guardians who kept him out of things—and he a man of fourteen."

"He will want his sons to be soldiers," the major said almost in a whisper. Leota answered, "Perhaps" in the same key, then fell silent. The major turned from her to stride up and down the long rows of trees, set by a joint great-grandfather, cherished by the seed of him until the present day. He had fought unbelievable odds in battle—nothing compared to what he now faced. He loved his blood, his name, his land—he had come back to its healing all but hopeless, counting himself a wreck in Time's tide. Then love and sunshine and—yes—hope had brought the beginning of healing. But for his maiming he stood a full man, Leota's father had been like an elder brother to him—he had played with her mother. Now he was rising thirty, actually; counting by war wear, nearer fifty, perhaps. Naturally Leota had seen in him no more than a playmate kinsman, though the blood tie was distant. But insanely he had let himself love her with all a strong man's late-come passion. And now he knew it was vain—she had chosen a younger, fitter mate; he must never let her guess what the choice meant to him. Henceforth his sole concern was her happiness, the fulfilling of her every wish.

At her soft call, "Come here, little Dan," he wheeled and strode to her. She caught his one hand and laid her cheek against it, saying dreamily, "You shan't ever have any Uncle Sam money—no bonus, no pension, while there's Lee land and Lee blood."

"That would be wicked; think of—the children," the major said, his breath coming hard. "I am thinking of them," Leota whispered, still dreamily, "because they will be—yours, as well as mine."

SHOWED WAY FOR EXPLORERS

Intrepid Traveler Failed in Quest, but at Least He Had Accomplished Something.

Jonathan Carver, son of a British officer, set out from Boston in 1766 to explore the wilderness north of Albany and lying along the southern shore of the Great Lakes. He conceived the bold plan of then traveling up a branch of the Missouri (or "Messorie"), till, having discovered the traditional "Oregon, or River of the West," on the western side of the lands that divide the continent, "he would have sailed down the river to the place where it is said to empty itself, near the Straits of Anian."

By the Straits of Anian, it is supposed, were meant some part of Behring straits, separating Asia from the American continent. Carver's fertile imagination, stimulated by what he knew of the remote Northwest, pictured that wild region where, according to a modern poet, "rolls the Oregon and hears no sound save his own dashing." But Carver died without the sight. In his latter years he said of those who should follow his lead: "While their spirits are elated by their success, perhaps they may bestow some commendations and blessings on the person who first pointed out to them the way."

The Age of Trees.

Experts declare that a cypress in Louisiana is 2,500 years old. At the birth of Christ that tree had been standing two centuries longer than the time that has elapsed since the first voyage of Columbus. Rome was a town of mud huts when that tree sprouted from the seed, and Nineveh, of which the prophet Jonah tells, was just destroyed.

Yet it is far from being the oldest known tree. The Santa Maria del Tule cypress in Mexico is estimated to be between 5,000 and 6,000 years of age, and some redwoods in California are placed at 4,000 years. The Mexican cypress antedates the birth of Abraham as the Louisiana tree does that of Christ, and the redwoods probably were taller than any tree in Cook county when King Tut was laid in his tomb.—Chicago Journal.

IN NO POSITION TO KNOW

Logical Defense Put Forward by Soldier Accused of Being Asleep at His Post.

It was a court-martial. The prisoner was a rookie who was charged with having been asleep while on sentry duty.

Although the offense was a very serious one from the military point of view, it did not strike the prisoner as being anything more than a natural act.

"What is the charge?" asked the presiding officer.

"Found asleep at his post, sir," answered the sergeant.

"Private Winks," said the officer, "you are charged with having been asleep on guard. Are you guilty or not guilty?"

"'Scuse me, sir," objected Winks mildly; "but how am I to know, if I was asleep?"

DUST PARTICLES IN THE AIR

Investigation Undertaken by the Department of Agriculture Should Prove Interesting.

In connection with the solar radiation work of the weather bureau, United States Department of Agriculture, a daily count is now being made of the number of dust particles in the atmosphere at Washington. To make the count, the air pressure within the dust counter is suddenly decreased, causing a line of dust to be precipitated on glass, where the particles are counted with a microscope having a magnification of 1,000 diameters. On quiet mornings as many as 3,000 dust particles per cubic centimeter have been counted, but on clear mornings following precipitation the number drops to 150. Most of the particles appear to be extremely fine minerals or organic matter from the earth's surface, although some unconsumed carbon from smoke, gypsum, and calcite from building operations, and diatomaceous material have been observed. Undoubtedly there are many particles which, while large enough to act as nuclei for condensation, are too small to be seen through a microscope with a magnifying power of 1,000 diameters.

One Tragedy Too Many.

Many writers are now placing the murder of Duncan by Macbeth in Glamis castle. The home of the duke of York's fiancee has enough tragedies in its history, without this unwarranted addition. Shakespeare places the murder probably with as much accuracy as is now possible in the region of Inverness. It was some time after the murder that the scene changed to the Glamis district, with the incident of Dunsinane and Birnam. Persistency in the Duncan story is obviously due to confusion with the undoubted murder of Malcolm II, within the old walls.

Dusty Subway Door Mirrors.

Although worthless for that purpose when trains are in stations and the lights make them as near transparent as the dirty glass can be made subway doors serve as mirrors for the fair sex as the train roars through the dark tunnels.

Frequently one of these passengers can be seen using the glass in the center or end doors of a subway train as a mirror for primping purposes. The lights in the car cast upon the dark glass surface make a fairly good mirror.—New York Sun.

Making the world smaller, or extending the circle of your acquaintanceship, amounts to the same thing and radio broadcasting is a wonderful way to bring this about.

One needs only to suggest an interest in radio and he has established a kinship of understanding in almost any community.

A speaking knowledge of radio opens up possibilities of an unlimited number of friends.

Electric Power for Farming.

In the electrified districts of Sweden electric power is used for every possible purpose, including thrashing. Considerable study has been given even to the application of electric power to plowing, with more or less success. Where equipment is too expensive to be bought by individual farmers, community ownership arrangements have been developed satisfactorily.

The Famous Book of Death

By CHARLES E. BAXTER

(©, 1923, Western Newspaper Union.)

"THE coroner's jury was quite right. There is no evidence to connect Mr. Harold Thayer with the murder of his uncle."

So spoke Grinning, the famous private detective, who had been called to investigate the death of Rufus Thayer, to the local police chief.

"I'm inclined to agree with you," answered Rogers. "Of course, he inherited all the old man's property."

"And would have come into it in the course of a few years, anyway," Grinning responded.

Harold Thayer had urged Grinning to come to the house and investigate. The circumstances were these: Rufus Thayer had retired to his country seat after a distinguished career as a judge in Burma, extending over many years. He had brought with him a number of Burmese trophies, among them the famous Book of Death, from a Buddhist temple, which he had purchased at great cost after the sack of Mandalay, many years before.

He had never found time to prosecute certain studies, but now he had spent his retiring years going into certain obscure ritual practices of a Buddhist sect. The Book of Death contained the secret of these rituals.

It was so called because tradition said that every person who had ever attempted to unravel these mysteries through the book had come to a violently sudden end.

Old Thayer had been found dead at his desk with the open book before him.

Grinning looked at the book, studied the quaint pictures that adorned the extraordinary text, and shook his head.

"We must get Palgrave, the Burmese authority," he said.

"But surely you don't attach importance to the legend?" asked Rogers.

Grinning was non-committal. Palgrave arrived next day, a queer little old man with fiery whiskers and snow-white hair. He examined the book carefully through a microscope in the presence of Thayer, Grinning and Rogers.

"You say your uncle was found dead on the very day he began the study of this book?" asked Palgrave.

"We found him dead in his chair. He—please be careful, Mr. Palgrave; the edges are stuck and it might tear easily.

Palgrave was fingering the book. "This tradition—" he began. "Has any other person died, to your knowledge, after reading it?"

"My uncle spoke of several; but he had had the book shut away for many years," answered Harold Thayer.

"Let me caution you not to touch it, then," Palgrave rejoined. "I shall have to conduct certain investigations. . . . No, leave it open, just as it is, upon that table. Thanks, gentlemen."

"But what are you going to do?" questioned Grinning, when they were outside.

"I shall take it up to my laboratory tomorrow and have the ink carefully analyzed. It may contain a toxic agent—"

"Surely, not after so many years?" asked Rogers. The three had descended to the living room, leaving Harold Thayer upstairs.

"There are certain poisons that give out imperceptible aromas continuously. You must remember that the whole book is heavily printed in wood block type; the illustrations are masses of color; in fact there is almost as much ink as paper there. Now it is quite possible that the moisture of the atmosphere would combine with these chemical agents to produce a sensible chemical discharge. . . . I may instance prussic acid, the inhalation of which causes immediate death. However, that is at present theory, and—"

"What's that?" cried Rogers.

There was the sound of a body falling in the room above.

Without a word Palgrave dashed from the room, the others following. He burst open the door of the room above. On the floor lay Harold Thayer, quite dead. The book was open on the table. Palgrave bent over him. He raised his hand. The thumb and finger-tips were wet.

"Quicker action than I anticipated," said the expert. I blame myself very much for not having foreseen that. Still, Thayer ought to have obeyed my instructions. He was so afraid I would tear the book that he tried to separate the pages. Unfortunately he did it with a moistened thumb and forefinger.

"It's an old, very old Oriental trick, gentlemen. You'll find it in the Arabian Nights. The poison was used to stick the leaves together at the edges, so that any person not knowing the secret who tried to separate them in Thayer's way—well, gentlemen, poor Thayer paid a terrible penalty. But I ought to have warned him. I—failed."

Atomization First.

The first requisite of a good burner is that it shall atomize fuel satisfactorily. Since oils are of different densities and viscosities, and as different rates of feed must be used to accommodate the rate of combustion to the load on the boiler, it follows that the burner must be fitted with suitable valves in order that its action may be regulated closely. This regulation applies not only to the oil but to the atomizing medium as well.

A THORNLESS ROSE

Be kind. The fault that looms so large
In someone else
May not be yours, but to your charge
May lie one worse.

Be gracious. It is better far
To overpraise,
Than thoughtlessly some soul to mar
With sharp reproach.

Be merciful. For after all
Is said and done,
Who thinks he stands may shortly fall
And mercy need.

Be careful. Unwise speech will wing
Both fast and far
To unsuspected realms and sting
With hurtful wound.

Be fair. Your judgment does not close
The whole account:
Another finds high praise for those
You criticize.

In fine, the love that searches long
Some good to note
And helps to fill the world with song,
Is like the rose.

'Tis true that on one bush there grow
Both rose and thorn;
Yet, in life's garden, kind hearts know
A thornless rose.
—William Forney Hovis, in Kansas City Star.

STONE THAT CHANGES COLOR

Peculiar Property of Element Found in Eastern Africa Something of a Puzzle to Scientists.

A new precious stone has been discovered which has the remarkable property of changing its color. Hellodore, as the new stone has been named, was found in eastern Africa; it is now puzzling scientists by its strange behavior.

In daylight it appears as a brilliant point of flaming yellow. Place it in the rays of a gas burner or an electric lamp, and it takes on the flashing green hues of the emerald. In the dim light of dawn or dusk it assumes the white brilliance of the diamond.

It is astonishing that one stone should have all these colors at different times, though actually almost all of our precious stones are varying forms of the same thing. Diamond, ruby, topaz, and emerald are all made of the same ingredients as the carborundum powder used for cleaning table knives!

If we reduce them to their simplest form, we find that they consist of nothing but carbon, which is the same thing as the black lusterless soot that the sweep removes from our chimneys.

Even the famous Cullinan diamond is nothing more than a lump of soot compressed by enormous forces and welded by terrific heat when the world was cooling down millions of years ago.

Drink Too Much for Leopard.

The sundowner habit, taking a drink at sunset, has saved a settler's life in Kenya, according to a story from Nairobi, Africa. While sitting on the veranda of his bungalow one evening he was attacked by a leopard which sprang out of the dark. The leopard, as his usual custom, made for the settler's throat, but his jaws closed over the glass of whisky. The strong spirit and the broken glass so astonished the animal that it dropped, coughing, to the ground, and the settler had time to reach for his rifle and dispose of the intruder.

Curious Error in Bible.

It may be of interest to those who delight in "Vinegar" and "Breeches" Bibles to know that in the English church at Ostend there is a "Lion's" bible, says the British chaplain there. In this edition the opening verse of II Kings, Chapter 9, run thus: "And Elisha the prophet called one of the sons of the prophets and said unto him, 'Gird up thy lions,'" etc. The publishers were Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode of London, Edinburgh and New York.

Dog Merely Retaliated.

Cub reporters are usually told that if a dog bites a man it is not news; but if a man bites a dog it is. Now we have a 'bite' of news. An investigation conducted by a policeman in Cincinnati showed that a poodle only bit off the end of a man's nose after the man had bitten the dog's ear. After the constable's report, the health department decided to rescind a former resolution and permit the dog to live.

Hen Fitted With Wooden Leg.

A hen in Carmarthen, Wales, met with an accident which necessitated amputation of its leg at the joint. An amateur veterinary surgeon successfully performed the operation, replacing the lost limb with a neat wooden leg. The fowl is now able to get about the yard with its peg-leg, and shows no sign of discomfort.

Rendered Dumb by Accident.

A girl of eleven fell from the Paris express as it was nearing Metz. She sustained no bodily injury, but lost the power of speech, and doctors say she may remain dumb for the rest of her life.

The Scrap Book

EASY MATTER TO EXPLA

Maid Had Ready Answer for Inqui as to How the Dishes Came to Unfortunate End.

There was a loud crash and a ti kling noise as the new tea-servi which Jane w carrying met th hard floor of the kitchen.

Almost immediately there was a patter of feet outside, and the kitchen door opened to admit Jane's tyrannical mistress.

The mistress gazed with dismay at the mass of debris on the floor.

"Oh, Jane, Jane," she cried. "How did it happen?"

"Lack of co-ordination between mind and muscle, ma'am," replied Jane.

WALNUT PUT TO MANY USES

Modern Science Has Discovered That No Part of the Fruit Need Be Wasted.

The walnut can be put to more uses than most people imagine. In California it has been discovered that no part of this product need be wasted.

The trade is in the hands of a Walnut Owners' association, which last year produced 18,000 tons of nuts. They have installed the most modern machinery, including a machine for cracking nuts. It can deal with 15 tons a day.

The nuts are passed through a number of metal fingers, which crack the shells without hurting the kernels.

For nuts, which are dust covered or otherwise unfit for sale without cleaning, there is another machine which removes the dirt and polishes the walnuts. This is worked by compressed air, which moves a number of brushes fitted into a long trough.

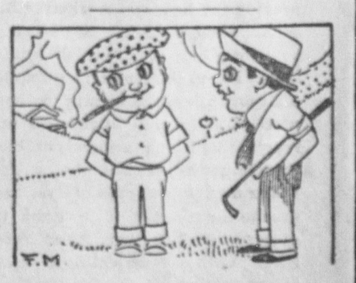
Shells, which hitherto have been regarded as waste matter, are now made into charcoal. The kernels, besides being canned, are used in many other ways. They are made into nut loaf, which is said to be an excellent substitute for roast beef! Walnut bread has also been introduced, and is becoming quite popular. Muffins, cakes, and puddings are other things made from nuts.

Copper Finds in Sweden.

Following an investigation of the recently discovered ore deposits in the Province of Vasterbotten, Sweden, the chief of the geological committee announces that the copper finds are of great importance, running at least 10 per cent copper. The largest deposit, he states, is from 180 to 200 meters long and 10 to 15 meters thick and apparently very rich. From the depth of only five meters it is expected that the ore to be taken out will yield about 1,500 tons of copper. Three forms of sulphur pyrite ores have also been located, as well as a combined zinc and sulphur ore.

Memel.

Memel, again a center of trouble, has not had a very peaceful history. It was founded as far back as 1252 by the Teutonic order, and was formerly one of the towns of the Hanseatic league. But it was not often left in peace for long periods, on account of its frontier situation, Russians, Swedes and Germans having fought for it at different times. It was again bombarded in 1915. In this country it is principally known from the fact that its name is given to certain timber of which it is the exporting center.



LETS GEORGE DO IT

"How does Lazenby play golf?"

"By proxy. He sends the caddie over the course, while he sits on the clubhouse veranda."

Couple Similarly Afflicted.

A couple, each of whom had only one leg, happily hobbled into the Lewiston (Eng.) registrar's office, where they were married last month. The bridegroom, who lost his leg at Ypres in 1917 with the West Kents appeared on crutches. The bride wore an artificial leg as the result of an accident when a child. Her infirmity was hardly noticeable.

Mountain of Sulphur.

Attention is being directed to the existence of an island in the Hebrides group which is literally a mountain of sulphur 1,600 feet high and perhaps as much as 100 square miles in base. The material of the mountain is said to be 99 per cent pure sulphur and the rest ash.

Wild Duck Traveled Far.

A wild duck which was banded in Maine was found a little more than two months later in Trinidad, 3,000 miles distant.

THINK BEFORE YOU SPEAK

State College Resident, Name Withheld, Learns a Lesson.

Speaking too quickly has frequently been the cause of persons getting into embarrassing situations. A man who recently had erected a very pretty home in State College—a well-known farmer for years in Buffalo Run valley, who owns wide and fertile acres in this section—was annoyed by the persistent appeal of a Penn State professor to part with the property. Finally, our farmer friend decided to name a big price and stop the professor. In the next approach, when the professor said, "Name a price on your property. I want it."

The farmer replied, "$7,000 will take it."

"I have the cash ready for you just as soon as you draw the deed," was the astounding answer. But the deed was never drawn.

Speaking to a friend, the farmer said, "I would have had a profit of $1,800, but I really did not want to sell. I had built the home for myself."

"Did you do any work about the property?" was asked.

"Yes, I helped a little."

"Did you have your teams do any hauling?"

"Yes, they hauled quite a bit."

"How much did you pay for your lot?"

"I paid $800 and forgot to figure that in."

"Well, if you had included your lot, the value of your time and the extra hauling you did, you would find your margin of profit was very small."

There is the lesson. What at first seems like a big price to pay for rent, may not be money on the investment when figured accurately as it should be What at first seems like a big price for a property, may be less than its real value, if all things are considered. As this is true of renting and selling property, it is true in every phase of life and activity. The next time our friend is asked for a price on his property, he will refuse absolutely to name any figure. It is his home and there is no price on it.
